

October 11, 2017

Newly-Announced CLUE Stage Play Adaptation Will Tour The Country

By Ben Pearson

It wasn't long ago that we heard 20th Century Fox is rolling the dice on a film remake of Clue, the 1985 cult classic murder mystery comedy based on the beloved board game. But now Variety reports that Jonathan Lynn, the writer/director of the '85 film, has written a stage play adaptation and is bringing it to regional theater next year before the play embarks on a nationwide tour.

This project reportedly came to happen through a partnership between a company called the Araca Group (Wicked) and toy/game company Hasbro, who apparently also have a musical in the works based on another board game, Monopoly. Plans are being made for a United States tour as well as touring in the United Kingdom, but no Broadway run is planned at this point. They're still so far away from launching that we don't have any casting news yet, but we'll keep you posted if anything more interesting pops up in regards to this project. To the Clue-lovers among you — and really, that should be all of you, because that movie is great — what do you think about this? Would you pay to see a live stage play version of the show in person?