TJP – THE JOST PROJECT WINS BEST IN JAZZ IN PHILADELPHIA IN THE PHL LIVE CENTER STAGE AWARDS

Philadelphia, PA (December 15, 2017) – TJP, formerly known as The Jost Project, won BEST IN JAZZ IN PHILADELPHIA in the PHL LIVE CENTER STAGE Awards presented by Philadelphia City Councilman David Oh. The Fourth Annual PHL LIVE Awards show took place December 14, 2017 at The Trocadero in Philadelphia. Tony Miceli (vibes) and Paul Jost (vocal, harmonica) accepted the award for the band. Kevin MacConnell (bass) was not able to attend. It was presented by two of the judges, WRTI’s Jeff Duperon and The Clef Club’s Lovell Hines. Miceli offered a humble “Thank you,” and Jost shared how surprised and grateful they were, appreciating all the talented performers in the category.

The event concluded a multi-phase, city-wide music competition where local artists in music were given the opportunity to win prizes including $1,000 to each winner in the 11 genres recognized, recording time and more. Created by Councilman Oh, he said in a recent Metro newspaper article, “When I was running for office apart of what I talked about was the importance of the creative innovative economy. With Philly’s history as a music city and the fact that music is an equal opportunity employer, if we could provide the opportunity for people to make it, we want to help them.” He appreciates the great support he received from the local music industry leaders.

Judges in each of the 11 categories picked their favorite acts to advance to the live performance phase of the competition. Categories included R&B, World, Classical, DJ/EDM, Country/Folk, Hip Hop, Jazz, Gospel and Rock. The jazz competition took place at the Clef Club on November 8, 2017.
